

Make the world
a better place through business.

Focus area: Labour relations

Labour relations examines issues involving employer and unionized relationships in the workplace in a variety of social, legal, political and economic contexts. Pursuing courses from this focus area will help you understand the complexities and the importance of union-management relationships. You'll also develop analytical skills to help identify and establish successful strategies to promote workplace equality and inclusion in Canada and abroad.

If you would like to focus your studies in labour relations, you should consider the following elective courses, which we expect to offer over the next two academic years:

- BUSI 4335: Advanced Labour Relations (formerly BUSI 6320)
- BUSI 4336: International Labour Relations (formerly BUSI 6330)
- BUSI 5332: Labour Law (formerly BUSI 7322)
- BUSI 5335: Collective Agreement Administration and Arbitration (formerly BUSI 7320)
- BUSI 6048: Inclusion and Diversity at Work
- BUSI 6045: Management of Occupational Health, Safety and Employee Wellness
- ECON 3360: Labour Market Economics and any other labour relations course (or courses) offered at the BUSI 6000 or BUSI 7000 level.

All course descriptions are available through the University Calendar.

Career options:

- Employee relations specialist
- Human resource specialist
- Labour policy analyst
- Labour relations analyst
- Union representative