

SUSTAINABLE RURAL COMMUNITIES

Certificate in Sustainable Rural Communities

The Certificate in Sustainable Rural Communities is designed for those who are interested in the study of practical and theoretical understandings of sustainable rural communities, with a focus on real-world applications of contemporary strategies to address opportunities and issues within rural places. Core courses will dissect the term “rural” and examine the urban-rural divide through a critical lens. Specific attention will be paid to current issues facing rural Newfoundland and Labrador across multiple sectors: tourism, environment, economy, culture, and heritage.

Notice for international applicants

Please note that due to the program's length, the focus of the program on the context of rural Newfoundland and Labrador, and the remote nature of some course offerings in this program, it is not recommended that international students apply for the Certificate in Sustainable Rural Communities as a standalone program. International students seeking to apply for the certificate are recommended to complete the program requirements as a component of another degree program rather than applying only for the Certificate in Sustainable Rural Communities.
